ADR Philosophy:

“I do not believe in a rigid approach to the practice of dispute resolution. Rather I believe that each dispute should be considered as a distinct matter and a process should be applied based upon each unique set of facts, issues, concerns, and personalities. Whether a facilitative or evaluative style, or combination should be used, or joint or private caucus or a combination thereof deployed, all of these should be considered each time with input from the participants. For dispute resolution to be successful, you need party buy-in, honesty and trust—along with creativity, the end result is often a successful outcome.”
